

The HERstory Project

Role: Contributing Writers (website)

Reporting to: Internal

Communications Manager

About The HERstory Project

Welcome to The HERstory Project, a collaborative historical education initiative dedicated to amplifying the voices of women, queer individuals, and other underrepresented histories, and their historians.

Our core values are education, accessibility, enjoyment. As a Community Interest Company, we are dedicated to providing opportunities for the career development and experiences of early career historians and academics. (Defined as postgraduate applicants and students – individuals five years post-doctoral studies).

Our contributing writing and editorial teams are primarily made up of individuals in this category. Our website www.herstoryproj.com is free access, and our site contributors are historians and academics at the start of their careers. All work published is researched, written, and edited by our in-house teams. The primary aim for the site is to provide a platform for underrepresented histories and their historians, by giving opportunity to write short articles about the research that they care about.

Purpose of the role

- Researching and writing original work at least twice a year
- Participating in THP's wider goals for the promotion of underrepresented histories

Person Specification

Essential	Desirable
<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Excellent level of written English• Demonstrable interest in women's, queer or other underrepresented histories• Degree in history or other relevant subject• Intent to pursue a career in history/research/academia• Respectful of Company Values: Education, Accessibility and Enjoyment• Excellent Time Management, ability to meet deadlines• Excellent interpersonal/team skills	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Postgraduate degree in history or other relevant subject – or an intention to undertake

How to apply:

Fill out the form at www.herstoryproj.com/writeforus/

We will only consider applications with an article proposal.